This action plan is an evolving document and reflects current research in the field.
Our action plan is guided by the research of Olweus (1993), the Massachusetts General Laws, Roberge (2011), and Nixon and Davis (2011). Our action plan acknowledges that students must develop resiliency to handle the types of struggles that they may face in problem situations and bullying situations and this document reflects our efforts to help students build those skills.
It also takes into account the significance of the bystander's role in preventing bullying in our school. Statistically speaking, bystanders comprise the largest population of students in bullying situations. The plan also takes into account the need to help students build and develop empathy. The social-emotional curriculum helps students build these skills and support groups are designed around helping children view a situation through lenses other than their own

Bully Prevention Updates 2013-2014 Qualters Middle School

Qualters Middle School

Academic and Non-Academic Activities

Team/Wellness Meetings:

Each month, the administrative team will meet with team teachers, school adjustment counselors, and nurses, who work with all students on their assigned teams. "At-risk" students as well as any other students with academic and/or social needs are discussed with the intent to provide support to those students. The topics that are discussed include: supporting the home/school connection, preventing bullying, developing empathy, helping families gain access to community resources, and providing support to military families.

Anti-Bullying Assemblies:

The Qualters Middle School also presents guest speakers and other community programs. Two examples of these programs include; Internet safety by Katie Greer and YMCA Ropes and Adventures in Respect Program. Bullying assemblies are also presented by the school administration for all grade levels with information presented from the website Bullyfree.com. The information from the Bully free website is paired with real life vignettes of situations that have occurred at the middle school.

Health Curriculum:

The Qualters Middle School currently implements QMS Challenge. QMS Challenge is an anti-bullying course that all students in grades 6 through 8 participate in. This course is offered as part of our specialist rotation and students experience QMS Challenge for a period of 60 days in one school year.
